Power outage cripples four buildings on UNO campus

STEVE GERTIG
STAFF WRITER

Due to a power outage that occurred on the UNO campus last Tuesday, classes were canceled in the Durham Science Center, Weber Fine Arts Building and Strauss Performing Arts Center. A performance of Metamorphoses scheduled for Thursday was also canceled. The University library did not lose power, but had to be shut down to the complete repairs for the outage.

This power outage started Tuesday at 8:30 p.m., according to a statement released by University Affairs. The outage was caused by an electrical short circuit in a main electrical service cable that supplies power to the three buildings. The university clock, along with the sewage pumps for the University Village dorms, lost power.

Building six at the UNO dorms had a few minor floods.

At first, "we thought it was just building six and shut off the water," said Nick Dornbusch, a resident assistant for the dorms.

The floods were cleaned up quickly and the real problem was diagnosed.

Dornbusch and other RA's were surprised to find out that while the dorms are not dependent on UNO for power, the sewer pumps are. UNO Facilities Management and Planning director Steve Conley was also surprised about any connection from UNO power to the dorm pumps. Dornbusch said that the dorms were considering changing that dependence.

Ak-sar-ben Plumbing was called to drain the septic tank and a generator was rented to run the pumps. The pumps were run at a lower level of power that had the dorm officials asking residents to take brief showers and to not run the dishwashers.

Conley said that the cost of repairs is thousands of dollars for cable alone. Labor has to be paid at a premium for the work to be done overnight.

Fifteen years ago, the manhole cover west of Engineering building blew 30 feet in the air, according to Electric Company of Omaha Supervisor Dan Smith. He was replacing cable with his dad then. A joint can be seen inside the manhole showing that the ground level is about three feet higher than it used to be.

The cable(s) being replaced by Electric Company of Omaha are

Worker party's Presidential candidate Calero makes visit to Omaha

J. PARKER ADAIR
NEWS EDITOR

While presidential candidates George W. Bush and John Kerry were debating, and while Green Party candidate David Cobb was being arrested for being at that debate, Socialist Workers Party candidate Róger Calero made a campaign stop to speak with the people he represents, the workers.

Calero paid a visit to the Swift and Co. plant Thursday to spread knowledge of his party, which has run candidates in presidential elections since 1948. He made other stops during the day, including a speech at Creighton University and UNO.

The SWP nominated Calero at its June convention, seeing him as someone who could get the word out about the party, and help build toward a future challenge at the White House.

"It's important for working people to have a voice in defense of labor," Calero said. "We feel obligated to run candidates to present our party and the devastating effect of the economic crisis."

While he was born in Nicaragua, Calero still knows about the American working person. He has lived in the United States since 1985.

Calero, 35, is an associate editor of Perspectiva Mundial, a Spanish-language magazine. He also serves as a staff writer for the Militant. Calero participated in a union-organizing drive in Minnesota, where he worked as a meatpacker. In 2002, Calero worked to mobilize support for a broad campaign to block a U.S. government attempt to deport him to Nicaragua. Calero sees it as a victorious struggle that set an example of how to fight and beat back government attempts to deport others in similar situations. Arrin Hawkins, 29, is the SWP candidate for Vice President.

Calero's Latin American ties also help him understand current working conditions in America.

"Issues that workers and farmers face here aren't that different than millions worldwide," Calero said.

He calls for an "act of solidarity" amongst workers in other nations.

"We have much more in common than we do with the millionaires," he said. "Since the early 1970's, the ruling class has forced attacks on jobs, going after wages and jobs, and lowering the social wage."

He and the SWP view the two major party candidates as being nearly identical.

thing."

Calero sees the country as two Americas: One for those who own for a living, and one who works for a living.

He sees these as major differences and a thus a need is created for a party for the workers. While there are many third party candidates, Calero says he sees a right-wing shift with capitalist politics.

Calero sees the need for unions and workers to have a voice. It may take a while, but it is a cause he has dedicated himself to and hopes to make a bigger impact than in elections past.

"Ultimately, what we need to do is build a movement using unions and organizations," Calero said. "We can't just carry out a decree. They (workers' rights) have to be fought for by a massive movement."

rated for 13,800 volts. A power outlet in a home or office is 110volts. Safety is paramount with this much juice. Slacking on safety at some jobs can mean a burn or cut. For an electrician working on main lines, it can mean death if the proper precautions aren't taken.

Electric Company of Omaha's plan was to "get past Homecoming."

They did, and later they want to have some scheduled shutdowns. Smith says they are also trying to save UNO money by not having cable specially shipped in.

The power cables under UNO are rated for 20-25 years. Many of them are 35 years old. UNO has a master plan for its utilities that includes replacing these cables. Electric Company of Omaha has its own proposal, but the problem with the proposal is not the money. It's the time.

Since it is a challenge to name a good time to shut down three or four buildings for a period of 24-72 hours, Conley said they are "looking for windows of opportunity."

The hitchhiker's guide to the UNO election

October, 2004—About halfway through the fall semester, the entire campus will be called upon to select a new leader for themselves. However, after seeing two of them during my stint here at UNO with UNO elections, I've noticed a few things that I believe that any future candidates should heed, since it could be the keys to victory.

Point 1: If your opponents are violating the rules in any way, bite your tongue.

Now, I know many of you are yelling at the top of your lungs, saying that "justice may not be served" or "they should play fair." Well, sadly, I do agree with you, but according to past events, parties who complained about election rule breaking have lost the election they participated in. In the first election I witnessed, candidate Krissy Vogel filed grievances against candidate Joe Bilek for then-President Shay Riggs spreading mass e-mails around a college campaigning for Bilek. She filed these after the first election, and the Student Supreme Court, the majority of which happened to be involved in Pi Kappa Alpha, Bilek's fraternity (I will touch this point later), threw out her grievances. She later lost the run-off election.

Now, we move to the 2003 election, where incumbents Bilek and Kane Miller filed three grievances against Rhino party candidate, Tom Centarri. Once again, the high court, half of which belonged to Pi Kappa Alpha, enforced the grievances, and kicked Centarri out of the election. In the run-off election, Bilek lost to the third player, Jono Croskey.

So, apparently, the public reacts poorly to candidates who complain, and to the extent of filing grievances. The few people who actually vote are sick and tired of these setbacks, and apparently will vote for the candidate who didn't file the grievances. So, as I said before, if you learn that your opponent is breaking the rules, and you want any shot at winning, bite your tongue, or else it will come back to bite you.

Point 2: If there's a conflict of interest, request the judges be excused.

I said I'd cover this. But perhaps I'd better explain what I mean as a conflict of interest. If you find yourself in front of the electoral tribunal, do your research. Research what groups not only the judges are in, but also your opponent. If you find a parallel in your research between your opponent and any one of the judges, you can request that that specific judge be excused from the hearing. You can because of these "conflicts of interest," the judge could be biased, and be unable to render a fair verdict. I'll give you an

As Far As I'm Concerned

of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity excluded from the hearing. So, if you notice a conflict of interest with a judge and your opponent, ask them to be excused. If they really are a court for the student body, they must grant your request.

Point 3: Whoever gets the most votes, wins. Period.

The one thing that basically turns people off from this election is the rule that states that "In order for there to be a winner, one candidate must secure 51 percent of the vote." And if no candidate has this magic number, run-off elections are held again and again until one candidate hits that magic number. I think the fact is people that have voted again and again, and many will ask "What about my first vote? Didn't that count?" or "Why should I vote again?" I understand this, I feel your anger, and here's how it should work. The first election goes to whoever gets the majority of the votes, regardless of whether or not it's higher than 51 percent. Although, if there's a grievance, I can understand a run-off; but we shouldn't have one because the percent isn't high enough. I'll give you an example of where this rule being removed actually works: In 2003, Californians went to the polls to elect a new governor to replace Gray Davis in the recall election. The favorite candidate, Arnold Schwarzenegger, won the election with 49 percent of the votes. Need I say more? Now, back to the present. In the 2003 election, Rhino Party candidate Tom Centarri would have won the election, netting 43 percent of the vote. So much for the percentages.

So, that in a nutshell is the Hitchhiker's Guide for the UNO Election. If you believe that you can run for the Presidency, trust me on these three points, since I can prove them. Keep your mouth shut, be ready to excuse justices and pray that the Student Government removes the 51 percent rule, and you might actually stand a chance. I, however, won't be taking my own advice, since my services would be better served writing, looking out for everyone, and telling people my opinion about things, as far as I'm concerned.

Letter to the Editor:

Dear Editor:

I checked out The Gateway for the first time in awhile and saw that UNO is already having Student Government Elections. This is something that I was quite familiar with having run for Business Administration, freshman, Chief Administrative Officer and President/Regent positions in the past.

Knowing that every year a SG/UNO election is hard to finish without a grievance, I am going to take it upon myself to give you, "the voter/student" some advice on how to select the best President/Regent and Vice Presidential candidates. This can also apply to the United States Presidential elections as well if you really want to take it a step further to improve our future on a national scale.

If you want to pick the best candidates, you have to do what is the hardest thing to do in school – research the paper. In this case, your paper is your voice and vote. If you want to be heard, you better make a rational decision in the process.

Step 1: Talk to yourself. I know I do this all the time, but sometimes it's the best way to find the right answers. Below is a list of questions you can ask yourself regarding what your needs and wants are as a UNO student.

1. What am I happy with at UNO? How can I improve this thought?

2. What am I dissatisfied with at UNO?

How can I change this?

3. What is OK at UNO, but by doing _____, how could it be done differently to fit my needs and wants?

Step 2: Talk to your candidates. The best way to find out if a candidate is right to represent UNO and the Board of Regents is to simply talk to them. Get to know their personality, goals and what they plan to do in the office they seek. As I used to say at orientation to new students, "different strokes for different folks." There are many ways to come to the end result and if you feel that a certain ticket running represents how you want to get to the finish line, pass your baton on to them.

Key questions: What is your slogan? What do you stand for? What are your goals?

Step 3: Make the decision. It's time to cast your vote online and you want to make sure it's the best decision. You also want to make sure it's not based on popularity, but by who will get the job done, be professional about it and relate to you as a person and not something represented in the movie Mam Girls—as a "plastic." Also watch out for illegal campaigning. If you see any illegal campaigning, contact a Student Election Commission Member ASAP at 554-2620.

Letter to the Editor:

Dear Editor:

I wanted to reply to Josh Bashara's opinion article titled "Existence is a Snowflake," written for the Oct. 5, 2004 edition of The Gateway.

I would like to say that I am quite impressed and in awe of the snowflake article because it is the type of article that you don't see regularly in the paper. It was brutally honest, vulnerable, truthful, insightful, deep and was awkward sitting there on the page. I like it. I want more of it.

Displaying vulnerability by one being brings the thinking level of another being to a deep state that is mysterious, insightful and contagious.

I have, like Josh, pondered the "What's the meaning of life?" question. In my mind, that is an easy question. It wasn't always an easy question, however.

I too, have spent many nights in my bed looking at the ceiling wondering if this is it. If this life is all there is? If murder, gossip, jealousy, cheating, football and paying taxes is all there is to look forward to?

My answer, at the age of 22, is no.

It can't be. There is a deep desire in me to experience much, much more. I don't deny the feeling when it arrives and have hope that I will one day experience it – a life without pain, injustice and sorrow, a life that is pure and joyful.

This world is so screwed up. That instinct grows exponentially as you get older I've been told. Why is it this way? Because we have made it this way. But one day, all of our mess-ups and bent lives will be straightened out. There will be a day when we see perfection; when the tainted window of this dirty world will be made clean.

But in order to see this occur, there must be hope and with that hope – faith.

I have realized that because I am so messed up, I can't bend my life back to the way that it was designed to be. Only the designer can bend it back.

That is the difference between my view and most of the world religions out there. Most religions are all about earning your way to nirvana or heaven or someplace of eternal peace. Not for this guy. I can't earn squat. If the designer was on a scale system and only accepted people that were such and such percent that is good rather than bad – than that is a god I don't want to follow.

This is where the truth lays: realizing that we aren't good enough on our own to get a free ticket out of this world. I believe each of us has been given the choice to accept a free ticket, however (the same ticket I might add). Once we find out what that ticket is, only then will we find our purpose and meaning in life.

Those who have had the most influence in the world are those who have had a purpose. I believe you, Josh, have a purpose and that you are on the right path. You are already making a dent in people's hearts by vocalizing your thoughts. You are a couple steps ahead of the rest of the world. They are still dead to the fact that they are living and aren't even to the point where they can think about such topics as meaning and purpose. They are just zombies living in a world in which they bow down to and obey without question.

A building doesn't know why it was built unless the architect says why. So I say, go to the source or designer of this world and ask about your purpose and calling, and then you'll finally find peace, hope and truth.

You may not agree with me and you don't have to. However, I hope these words will have taken you to a deeper level of thinking, much like Josh's article did for me. That is the only way to break the surface of this surface-like world.

UNO's Learning Disabilities program helps students with disabilities in school

BRYAN KOHLER

STAFF WRITER

When people think of October, Halloween may immediately come to mind. October also marks the start of Disability Awareness Month.

Every college is required to have a Learning Disabilities program. However, students are rarely attracted to it. To be part of the program, it must be on the student's own accord.

"We don't attract students to this program," said Dr. Kristine J. Swain, an assistant professor for UNO's Learning Disabilities Program. "They must come in on their own."

Students who think they have a learning disability must have it identified by a physician before applying for the Learning Disabilities Program. The most common disabilities are communication disorders and language-based disorders.

Disabilities can range from the use of sign language, to not being able to read well. Documentation of learning disabilities is often gathered during the school-age period of one's life. During this time, he or she is tested by physicians. These physicians give the child various tests to see whether or not he or she has a learning disability.

There is much focus on the school-age period because if a disability is detected early, it is easier to treat and possibly cure. Due to this, UNO has the LD Clinic to help school-age children with various disabilities.

"Learning disabilities can be very frustrating for parents when their child has one," said Dr. Swain.

To be entered into this program, parents must sign their child up and possibly wait for a spot to open up. UNO's LD Clinic has quite a long waiting list because it is highly regarded. This clinic helps the enrolled children with learning strategies, work ethic and other aspects of school.

Even though there are programs such as this, many adults still deny the fact that they might have a disability. People who potentially have one, for example, may regard themselves as having bad vocabulary. They sometimes also state that they just can't listen or read well.

In all actuality, these symptoms could be possible learning disabilities. Then again, there isn't a set-in-stone cause for learning disabilities. Rarely in some cases, disabilities can be genetic, but physicians also suggest that the person hasn't been exposed to a good amount of language or writing.

For UNO students, treatment is available. The most common methods are extended test-taking time, taped textbooks and volunteer note takers.

For those who are deaf, sign language interpreters are also on staff.

A main emphasis for the program is to strengthen the students, make them aware of their disability and to make them more efficient learners.

Tutors and counselors also help the student select classes that can be handled according to their disability. The student must be aware that his or her handicap may not be fully cured, but will be improved upon.

For more information, visit the Disability Service in the Eppley Administration Building in room 117, or the Special Education and Communication Disorder department in Kaiser Hall, room 115.

My Chemical Romance seeping into Omaha

AMANDA GOREY
STAFF WRITER

New Jersey natives My Chemical Romance will be bringing its gothic version of pop-punk meets hardcore to Omaha. The band is currently on tour in support of its major label debut, Three Cheers for Sweet Revenge.

My Chemical Romance first came onto the scene in 2002 with its debut record, I Brought You My Bullets, You Brought Me Your Love, on New Jersey's Eyeball Records. In the past two years, the boys have gone from playing basement shows in their hometown to sold-out shows and worldwide touring.

Taking references from and inspired by comics, horror movies and dark, personal experiences, Three Cheers for Sweet Revenge is a concept album examining the darker side of life. Recently signed to Warner Brothers/Reprise, the group is hoping to gain greater mainstream distribution and potentially gain access to an expanded fan base.

Check out My Chemical Romance with local openers, Miles on End and Eyes Catch Fire, tonight at 6:30 p.m. This early, all-ages show will be taking place at the Ranch Bowl, 1600 S. 72nd St. Tickets are $10 day of show.

Wish You Were There

A quick re-cap of a concert you may have missed

The Shocker

REVIEW BY JOSH BASHARA
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

Last Thursday night at the Ranch Bowl, a pretty eclectic group of kids converged to witness the homecoming of Keith Million, a.k.a. Keith Fonzarellie (former frontman of the Omaha punk outfit, the Fonzarellies).

An Omaha native, Million captured the hearts of hundreds of Omaha music fans with his glam-punk persona during his six-year stint with the Fonzies. Not long ago, Million escaped the local scene and signed on as guitarist with The Shocker, a punk band fronted by Jennifer Precious Finch (previously of the all-girl punk band L7). And yeah, the band's name is inspired by the sexual hand position that shares the same name.

The two most notable openers at the show were Evil Squad (featuring ex-members of Omaha hip-hop group Noizewave) and Suzie Homewrecker (an all-girl punk band, also from Omaha).

Both did an satisfactory job of hyping the crowd—albeit a small one—for The Shocker, even if their sets did leave a little to be desired in the way of stage presence. Not that it really mattered though; it was obvious that most of the kids at the show—a mix of old-schoolers and Ranch Bowl regulars—were there mostly for support and status rather than pleasure.

The Shocker's set started with a blast of refreshing in-your-face punk energy, which assisted in livening up the static crowd a bit. However, as the band plowed through songs on its new album, Up Your Ass Tray, I found myself looking from side to side and wondering why most of these people seemed like they'd rather be somewhere else. The band had glitz, its music definitely had style, but the crowd was just not taking the bait.

Overall, the band gave a good show, but you know there's something wrong when the guy who's having the most fun at the show is the drunk one at the bar.

Hip-Hop Notes

COMMENTARY BY JULIAN IVEY
STAFF WRITER

If you're hip-hop, VH1's "And You Don't Stop" is a must-watch. The series is a five-part documentary on hip-hop culture. It begins with the origins of hip-hop, and then moves on through the major developments that brought things to where they are today.

The documentary featured everyone. I was surprised it covered so many details. I especially enjoyed the N.W.A. and Public Enemy segments.

I never knew Chuck D was a radio DJ prior to his rapping career. I had thought Ludacris was the first person to make a successful transition between the two jobs.

VH1 did an excellent job of following the culture's growth and expansion. I grew up about 45 minutes outside of New York City in Pennsylvania and I remember most of the things they spoke of. They did so well, in fact, I stopped being mad at them for not letting me be the next Danny Partridge.

Elliott Ness, formerly of Da Band, was almost shot to death last week. He is currently working on his solo debut for Bad Boy Records. When Ness could not guarantee the would-be collaborator's song would be on the album, a fight started and shots rang out. Ness made it out okay, but his Dodge Caravan wasn't so lucky.

Green Lantern releases an anti-Bush mix tape.

Tony award-winning Rent returns to Orpheum

REVIEW BY SOMMER LEINBACH
SINKSTATEWRITER

Hailed as bittersweet and evocative, Rent has become a musical icon and returns to Omaha's Orpheum Theater Oct. 15-17. Packed with mature themes and rock 'n' roll songs, Rent made a name for itself on Broadway, and then, across the country.

Based off the opera La Boheme, Rent is set in New York City amongst young struggling artists desperate to make a go of life before pop culture references, promiscuity and catchy rock 'n' roll tunes. It stars very serious issues in the face and forces everyone to take a long hard look. But it's not the shocking themes that keep people flocking to see the show; it's really the characters.

Mark is the narrator and aspiring filmmaker. He is behind the camera, never dealing directly in any of the conflicts. His roommate and best friend is Roger, a dreaming musician and recent recluse because his girlfriend informed him that they had AIDS face, they also must come to terms with how they fit in with each other, their budding relationships and the trials that come along with their individual wars. Mark is the only character who seems not stricken with something outside of his control, and can often do nothing else but stand aside and watch.

The musical opens up on Christmas Eve. The stage is sparsely decorated, which is good news for all those with rosebleed seats. Benny, it turns out, is the landlord of the building that Mark, Roger and Mimi live in. Benny intends to force Mark and Roger to pay a year's worth of rent in one day. They all used to be friends, and until this day, it had seemed that Benny was allowing Mark and Roger to live rent-free. If the rent isn't paid, it seems, then eviction is imminent.

Merry Christmas.

How do you make a relationship work when you're dying? How do you make a life for yourself when you know there's not much time left? What do you do when the people you care about the most disappear? The themes of Rent are universal and frightening. It is not a show for children. So much of the musical is upbeat and very funny, and so much of it is sad and hard to swallow. Jonathan Larson knew that when he wrote it. Larson's own life and death give the musical a power and meaning that can only be found in the great epic stories through time.

There's a reason Rent won the 1996 Tony Award for Best Musical as well as a Pulitzer Prize for Drama. It's not something any review can do an adequate job of describing. It's an experience that everyone comes away from differently.

Tickets for Rent may be purchased through www.ticketomaha.com or www.ticketmaster.com. Omaha's Orpheum Theater is located at 409 S. 16th Street.

The cast of 'Rent.' 'Rent' returns to the Orpheum Oct. 15-17.

it's too late. Musicians, dancers, singers, film makers... they all take on a very human, very flawed persona of humanity. Dealing with the dark side of betrayal, love, HIV, suicide and acceptance, there is nothing left to face when the curtain falls.

Rent steps beyond the modern taboos and cultural wars that would normally hold a person back. This musical is more than just before she committed suicide. Tom Collins is returning from a teaching career that didn't suit him. He also has AIDS. Maureen is a performer, currently dating Joanne, a lawyer. Benny is an old friend who married into wealth. Angel, a street musician, also afflicted with AIDS, befriends Collins early on. Mimi lives in the building that Mark and Roger do. She's got plenty of problems of her own.

Sirius Bizness, hosted by Eminem. This mix tape is part of a combined effort between many groups, but mostly, The Young Democrats of America. The mix tape is one part of a large effort the by YDA along with its "Trick or Vote" campaign that will go down Halloween weekend.

South Park creators Matt Stone and Trey Parker say P-Diddy's "Vote or Die" campaign is bad for democracy because it empowers uneducated voters to vote. Diddy disagrees and says that's just plain stupidity.

I have two questions for anyone out there reading: Do you ever wonder whether or not republicans have a place in hip-hop? Who is right between the South Park creators and P-Diddy? Let me know at julianivey@yahoo.com. I'll respond to your thoughts and views in two weeks. On one condition, though: I'm non-partisan, so don't come at me with your partisan rhetoric.

Beanie Sigel is going to be serving a year in jail after being found guilty on gun charges. Sigel is ready to do his time and filmed five music videos, his scenes in the State Property sequel and finished his third album, The B-Coming, which is due out in December.

In other Roc-A-Fella news, we have Jay-Z's rags-to-riches documentary Fade to Black, which has been picked up by Paramount Classics and will be in theaters Nov. 5. The film is narrated by Jay and follows him during the creation of The Black Album.

The Game is switching his lead single from the Dr. Dre produced "Higher" to another Dre production "Fresh 83." The new single's beat is supposed to be from Dre's archives.

Ludacris is about to release Rail Light District, his follow-up to Chicken-n-Bear. The album should be out Nov. 23 and the first single, "Get Back," was produced by the Medicine Men (formerly known as Beats by the Pound).

The Diplomats and Cam'ron are both about the drop new albums: Diplomatic Immunity 2 at the end of November and Purple Haze at the beginning of December. I personally think Cam'ron is one of the best—if not the best—lyricists out there.

I'll be in D.C., Philly and NYC over fall break to get you the best and latest hip-hop information. Watch "And You Don't Stop" on VH1. It's the best hip-hop special I've ever seen. I hope you enjoy your fall break. Be safe and get ready to vote.

UNO football team beats Minnesota-Duluth 38-24 in a Jekyll and Hyde performance

ANGIE PECK
SPORTS EDITOR

Watching the UNO Maverick football team defeat North Central Conference newcomer University of Minnesota-Duluth Saturday was like watching Dr. Jekyll change into Mr. Hyde and back.

The Mavericks picked up a 38-24 homecoming game win over Minnesota-Duluth Saturday in front of 5,300 fans at Al Caniglia Field.

The Maverick defense held Minnesota-Duluth to a field goal in three quarters, but then allowed three touchdowns in the fourth quarter.

Michelle Bishop

Jamar Day runs past the Minnesota-Duluth defense during Saturday's game. Day ran for 174 yards and scored twice.

The Maverick offense saw Jamar Day run for 174 yards and score two touchdowns and Brian Masek was 12-14 for 196 yards with no interceptions. They controlled the ball for most of the first half, but were only able to put points on the board when defensive back Jeffrey Phelps and linebacker Taiwo Onatolu each picked off Duluth in the second quarter.

"We had been playing good offense, but we just didn't have any points to show for our yards," Masek said. "We struggled before halftime, but we came back and did what we should have in the first half and put points on the board."

After having his first field goal attempt blocked, sophomore Andy Severson opened scoring with a 20-yard field goal in the first quarter. The Mavs then took advantage of Phelps and Onatolu's interceptions to put two quick touchdowns on the board in the second.

Phelps picked off UMD quarterback Kyle Opahle and returned it 26 yards to the Bulldog 30 and Masek hit Mike Nizzi on a corner route. Nizzi reached over UMD defensive back Tim Garceau for the touchdown.

Taiwo Onatolu stepped in front of an Opahle pass on UMD's next drive and returned the ball 14 yards, again to the Bulldog 30. Jake Krause picked up his first career touchdown pass on a 2-yard pass from Masek putting the score at 17-0 just before halftime.

UMD took advantage of the Mavericks' mistakes. UMD running back Dave Ruffledt—after being held to only 66 yards in the first half—exploded, picking up an additional 119 yards and two touchdowns.

"We held him up for most of the game, but he just kept chipping away and wore us down," said Onatolu. "He racked up most of his yards in the fourth quarter."

UNO forced UMD to punt on the first drive of the second half, but Jeremy Anderson fumbled and UMD recovered at the UNO 10-yard line. The UNO defense did not allow UMD to pick up any yardage and forced them to kick a 27-yard field goal.

After a touchdown from Day, the UNO defense forced UMD to punt, Onatolu blocked a punt from Luke Radkeat at the 50-yard line, while running to the back for the easy touchdown. Onatolu fumbled the ball at the UMD 25-yard line and UMD's Mark Slinden recovered at the 16-yard line.

"I was holding the ball wrong, I should have tucked it, and my hands were slippery and I just dropped the ball," said Onatolu.

The drive resulted in UMD's first touchdown and a failed two-point conversion, bringing the score to 31-9.

On the next Maverick drive, UNO was forced to punt. UMD's Sam Brown blocked Don Grafton's punt, and recovered the ball at the UNO 29. Three plays later, UMD put another touchdown on the board, this time completing the two-point conversion for a 31-17 score.

"I don't know if we were ever not in control of that game," Head Coach Pat Behms said. "There were some times that we looked awfully good on both sides of the ball, and then there were times that we didn't look very good."

UNO answered with a touchdown pass from Masek to Shawn Ostlund, putting the game out of reach with only three minutes left. UMD picked up one additional touchdown before the clock ran out, making the final score 38-24.

The Mavericks improve to 5-2 overall, and 2-0 in the North Central Conference. They return to action Saturday against Augustana in Sioux Falls, S.D. Kickoff is set for 1 p.m.

Maverick Hockey gains first season opening victory, Stampede in Saturday, Sunday competition

ANGIE PECK
SPORTS EDITOR

UNO picked up their first season opening victory since their 2000 Maverick Stampede victory over Niagara on Saturday as the Mavericks put the University of Connecticut away 4-1 at the Qwest Center.

As if that was not enough for one weekend, the Mavericks came back Sunday night to win the Stampede for the first time ever with a 4-3 win over Merrimack in the championship game.

It looked as if the Mavs were going to run away with the championship game after a pair of goals by Bryan Marshall and Mike Lefley secured a 2-0 lead for the Mavericks, but Merrimack fought back in the second period, catching goalie Chris Holt outside the net for an easy open net score and picking up a second goal in the last second of the period.

Merrimack's Jeff Royston evened the score with a goal at the 2:20 mark. Bill Thomas scored the winning goal off a rebound from a Scott Parse rocket, though at the time Parse thought he had scored, as well as Thomas, but Thomas saw a Merrimack defender still going for the puck, and Thomas tapped it across the goal line.

"I thought (Parse) scored and was about to start celebrating, but I saw the defender poke at it," said Thomas. "It didn't even hit the back of the net."

"It was a great pass," said Parse. "I thought I scored it and was already celebrating, but it doesn't matter who scored it"

On Saturday, UConn scored the first goal of the game on a power play; left wing Tim Olsen took a long pass, raced between the Maverick defense and slipped the puck right under UNO goaltender Chris Holt at the 17:53 mark.

"We knew the other team (UConn) was going to come out and in the second half we turned it up," Forward Dan Hacker said, "There wasn't one point where we thought we wouldn't win."

"I was very disappointed with the way we came out in the first period," said Head Coach Mike Kemp. "We did not react the way I thought we should have."

UNO had a two-man advantage in the middle of the second period. Hacker fired a pass over to Rob Chappell who rocketed the puck right by UConn goalie Scott Tomes, into the top of the net to tie the game at 1-1.

Captain Mike Lefley got a rebound off a blue-line shot from Mike Eickman and flipped it in net to give UNO their first lead in the game, 2-1, at the 19:18 mark of the second period and the Mavs never looked back.

Eickman gave UNO an insurance goal and picked up his first goal in a Mavericks uniform in the third period.

"I just jumped into the play, and yelled," said Eickman. "I didn't even get good wood on it, but it was enough for the goal."

After serving a two-minute penalty, Hacker exploded out of the penalty box, and was hit with a perfect pass for the breakaway goal at 11:38 of the final period.

"I was just thinking of how to redeem myself," said Hacker.

Maverick goalie Chris Holt picked up his first two wins of the season with a 16 save performance Saturday and an 18 save performance Sunday. Thomas, Parse and Holt were named to the all tournament team, and Thomas was named the tournament's MVP.

UNO is 2-0-0 for the first time in school history. Nebraska-Omaha has a bye week next weekend and will open CCHA play with a home series with Western Michigan on Oct. 22-23.

Maverick soccer picks up fifth shutout against Minnesota-Duluth

ANGIE PECK
SPORTS EDITOR

UNO picked up two more wins this weekend, putting Augustana away 8-1 on Saturday. On Sunday, they picked up their fifth shutout against North Central Conference newcomer Minnesota-Duluth 4-0.

On Saturday, UNO took on Augustana, and outdid their seven-goal performance from Wednesday versus Northwest Missouri State with a victory.

Brandie Beale recorded a hat trick, the third by a Mav in the last four games. She also added an assist. Meghan Pile, Erin Fosnaugh and Haley Fries all picked up their first goals of the season in the second half.

UNO scoring began early. Beale took a pass from Beth McGill and sliced it into the far right corner past Augie goalie Charise Hayward at the 6:13 minute mark.

Pile soared a direct kick to Beale who passed it to Willrett for the score less than six minutes after the first score. At the 22:09 mark, Beale tallied her second goal of the game on an assist from Ali Portell.

The Augies cut the UNO lead to two as Angie Hayes scored unassisted while catching UNO goalkeeper Amy Price out of the box.

UNO responded with a goal just before halftime as Portell received an indirect kick from McGill and placed the ball just under the crossbar.

Beale completed her hat trick at the 68:53 mark with an assist from Pile due to a free kick. With the assist, Pile picked up a different type of hat trick, with three assists in the game.

At 80:07, Amber Richardson sent a corner kick right in front of the goal as Pile recorded her second goal of the season, tapping it in for the goal from five yards out.

Five minutes later, Fries recorded her first goal of the year as she took passes from Tricia Braziel and Jane Splitterger in for the goal. Fosnaugh, notched UNO's final goal, with less than a minute remaining, from 20 yards out and right over the goalkeeper's head.

On Sunday, UNO got their first look at Minnesota-Duluth as a conference opponent. The Mavericks easily handled the Bulldogs, defeating them 4-0 and picking up their fifth shutout for the season.

Again, UNO used quick scoring to put away the Bulldogs, scoring three goals in the span of six minutes.

The scoring began at the 12:29 mark, when UNO took advantage of an offside call. Price rocketed a long ball to Beale who sneaked through the Bulldog defense and gave UNO their first goal of the day.

A corner kick from Richardson caused a scramble in front of the Bulldog net, Beale recovered the ball and passed it over to McGill who picked up her team-leading 15th goal of the season.

Willrett picked up the final goal of the half for UNO on a long pass from Richardson. The Bulldogs shut down the Maverick offense until the last ten minutes of the game. Willrett had a one-on-one opportunity against Duluth goalie Francisco, the ball rocketed off Francisco, as she was laying on the turf, Willrett scored easily on the open net.

Price and Ellen Petersen shared time between the pipes combining for the shutout.

Price recorded two saves including Duluth's best chance for a goal in the second half. Charging out of the box, Price was able to get a piece of the shot, but Duluth player Laura Mayerle, was unable to capitalize on the chance, missing the left post by a foot.

The Mavericks are now 12-2-1, including a 3-0 NCC record.

UNO's next game is Saturday against Minnesota State, Mankato, in Mankato, Minn. at 11 a.m.

The University of South Dakota handed No. 23 UNO their first game five loss of the season on Saturday, downing the Mavericks 3-2 (27-30, 25-30, 30-25, 30-24, 15-11) at the Dakota Dome in Vermillion, S.D.

UNO took the first two games but could not put the Coyotes away in any of the final three games.

Carlie Christensen, who belted 17 kills, hit .359 with only three errors in 39 attempts and a match-high three service aces. Four other Mavericks recorded double-digit kills, including Amy McLeay (16), Ashley Freeman (14), Jenny Rankin (11) and Briana Ritter (10).

The Mavericks held a 79 to 68 advantage in kills and out-hit the Coyotes .205 to .203 in the match.

Amanda Stock fired an opening round 75 on Saturday at Indian Creek Golf Course to take the individual lead in the North Central Conference women's golf tournament, lifting the Mavericks into second place. Stock shot 37-38 on the 6,018-yard, par-72 layout.

Teammate Tanis Hastmann, bidding for her fourth straight NCC title, shot a 76 and tied for second with Laura Kluge of Minnesota State.

The other UNO scores from Saturday were Carly Froehlich 86, Ashley Sipe 88 and Allyson Yung 91.

On Sunday, Tanis Hastmann strengthened her bid for a fourth straight NCC golf title with a one-over-par 73, giving her a three-shot edge over teammate Amanda Stock. Minnesota State-Mankato leads the team race by four shots over the Mavericks before Monday's final round at Shadow Ridge Country Club.

Stock, the first-round leader, shot a 77 and stands alone in second at 152. Carley Roach of Augustana, and Minnesota State golfers Laura Kluge and Lisa Spoden are all tied for third at 157.

The other UNO scores from Sunday include Carly Froehlich who shot an 84 for a 170 total, Ashley Sipe with an 83 for a two-round score of 171 and Allyson Yung who shot 85 for a 176 total.

Fees, fees and more fees

Can anyone make sense of the alphabet soup conglomeration of fees that show up on our tuition statements semester after semester?

Two weeks ago, I was sitting in my news editing class when this question began to pick at my brain.

I asked several of my fellow students if they knew what the Tuition (RUOC) and UPF fees per credit hour were. To my surprise, not one of them knew.

At this point, I decided it was my duty to find out what these fees and abbreviations mean for me and anyone else who wanted to know.

I only chose to find out in this fall semester—my sixth—because 16 percent of my $2,341 tuition is going to fees. (That's $372 for anyone who, like myself, can't do math.)

Going to work for you, the students, I hiked down to the administration building.

And I found out some things, but still I'm a little confused.

Let me first tell you that since the fall of 2003, tuition per credit hour has gone up nearly 9 percent, or $14 per credit hour.

But let's get going on the statement for this fall.

When I got to Cashiering/Student accounts, the lady working at the desk was somewhat helpful. She knew Tuition (RUOC) meant "resident undergraduate off-campus."

Excellent, one down, many to go, but I was learning. Tuition (UIC) is for an undergraduate Internet course.

All of this information can also be found in the 2004-2005 undergraduate catalog, starting on page 28.

The first fee on my statement is a $15 writing lab fee, which I was told goes to computer usage. Not until this day did I finally discover what a UPF Fee was. They are mandatory University Program and Facilities Fees. These fees, according to the undergraduate catalog, "support a wide variety of programs and services on campus." I was also told they pay for the HPER building. They do not however, support things like the library, or keeping up on technology. UPF fees are collected by way of a $50 flat fee plus $7.50 per credit hour with a cap at 12 hours.

This is where I became confused with the levy of fees. I came to find out that when you take an Internet class, you pay an additional $60 distance education fee on top of the $131.25

The Weekly Rant

per credit. That totals out to be a $453.75 Internet class. You better get an A in that one!

The technology fee, $6 per credit hour, is charged to provide technology resources to students, once again according to the catalog.

The lady at the desk then told me that the library fee of $2 per credit hour was to keep older books in usable condition. It's a good thing she told me because it doesn't clearly say what this money is used for in the catalog. As a matter of fact, none of the fees are really clearly defined in the catalog.

The smallest fee on the statement, the photo ID fee, was $2. I figured if I was paying money out every semester for my student ID, I could get a new one each semester.

I was wrong. This money is for "keeping up on technology," which I thought was taken care of in the $90 technology fee. I guess it costs $2 per semester for my student ID to be in my pocket, because all I use mine for is checking out library books. (Notice how these "technology" fees kind of all run together?)

Now, here is my favorite fee. The $20 Enrollment Services fee. When I asked the lady at Cashiering/Student Accounts, she told me I had to go to the Registrar to find out. So, I did.

When I got to the counter and asked, they told me to go ask Cashiering/Student Accounts. But I had already been there, and they told me to come here.

I waited for fifteen minutes at the counter, watching the person go into both offices behind the counter. When she came back, she told me that I had asked the $10,000 question. Amazing! I wasn't trying to stump anyone, but I apparently had done just that. She was able to finally tell me that this fee covers sending transcripts for the rest of your life. Great, I thought. This is the last school I plan to attend. This fee does me no good, and I'm sure I'm not the only one.

She told me they really didn't know where this money was used, only that the administration levies this tax...er, fee.

She assured me that if I left my name and address, they would send me something in the mail. It's been three weeks and I've received nothing.

I don't imply anything from this column. I only desire a more clear definition of these fees.

If I would have received a reply by now, this column would have been unnecessary. But I have no choice but to use the power of the press to my advantage.

Question: What do the people of Afghanistan, Iraq and the United States all have in common?

Answer: The integrity of each of these country's elections is in question.

The polls in Afghanistan ended the other day under a cloud of controversy about whether the ballots were spoiled. Apparently the ink used to fingerprint voters was removable, threatening ballot integrity. All 15 candidates running in opposition to the U.S.-installed interim president Hamid Karzai initially withdrew in protest, claiming fraudulent elections.

An investigation is to follow, but no one knows what sorts of oversights will be used to determine the outcome. More than likely, the U.S. will lead any investigation, as it has the most influence politically, militarily and financially over the operations there.

But we can't even get our own elections right.

From high-priced campaign advertising to months-long negotiations between candidates for how debates will be structured (including favorable camera angles to make Bush look taller), most people know we are not getting much more than an expensively packaged product (the kind that catches the interest of children in the cereal aisles with promises of cool toys inside). But we adults also understand the toy is rarely as it seems on the box.

From recent news accounts, it appears as though we are facing as many election problems as we did four years ago, which left voters more cynical and questioning whether we have a democratic process or men working holograms from behind a curtain.

In the wake of serious issues following the 2000 elections — after Bush was given Florida by the Supreme Court even while questionable ballots had not yet been counted, and even after we learned many legitimate voters (mostly African-Americans, who traditionally are known to vote Democratic) were illegally prevented from voting — Bush was selected to become one of only four presidents in the history of our country to supposedly win by electoral vote while losing by popular vote.

It is past time to abolish the electoral system, if we are ever to have real democracy in this country.

Under the electoral system, only 11 states determine the presidential elections, because by population they have the most electoral votes, rendering the remaining 39 states generally insignificant. In all states but Maine and Nebraska, it is "winner take all," which means if a candidate only wins 51 percent of the vote, they get to have all the electoral votes in that state, even if the remaining 49 percent of voters are vehemently opposed to that candidate.

According to Akhil Amar, Southmayd Chair of Constitutional Law at Yale Law School, our current form of "democracy" is tainted by a past to which we no longer ascribe. "The Electoral System was founded on racism and sexism," said Amar, adding it was connected to a lobby that supported the slave-holding system that we inherited. "It gave slaveholders an advantage," he said.

Amar explained in his NPR interview ("Electoral College System," Nov. 7, 2000) that the institution of an Electoral College was among the very last concessions agreed upon by the founders of the Constitution after the slave-holding South insisted they be given as much electoral power as the more populous North. Near the weary end of the Constitutional Convention in 1787, the South successfully lobbied for the Electoral College, touting higher population numbers by counting slaves among their citizenry. Ironically, however, those slaves were not allowed to vote. (And now there are questions about whether Florida is continuing that racist tradition.)

In a Sept. 27, 2004 Washington Post article submitted by former President Jimmy Carter, he claims more Florida voting trouble is expected.

This is the best way to avoid a grievance, by keeping everything fair between both parties.

From research that I've done, I can see that Elizabeth Kraemer wants to put students first and to be someone they can confide in. She wants to put Student Government in the students' view as being very existent and public relations is key here. She wants to provide solutions to all problems and establish accountability through Student Government.

Lamarr Womblé loves UNO. He brings new and fresh ideas to the table and is willing to learn while providing the leadership he has attained prior to running. He wants to represent the needs and wants of the student, have a positive outlook while doing it and improve Student Government recruiting as the "HR" man.

Vince Drieling wants the students' opinions to be heard. He wants to get the students involved in the decision making process as his main objective in the campaign. His focus will also go on safety and security and also the student life experience.

Jessica Vincik feels she is the best candidate to represent as a vice president. She feels she can recruit talented students into Student Government and by creating a faculty-student relationship. She can get commuter students' opinions heard. She can also get school pride and event attendance on campus to increase.

Each ticket has lofty goals and we all know that goals without action are nothing but talking the talk. If you need assurance when you are talking to the candidates, ask them how they will do these goals and discern for yourself what is achievable.

It is apparent that Drieling/Vincik want to:

- A. Offer an experience
- B. Help students represent in the decision-making process
- C. Get in the classroom
- D. Find out why students go to UNO
- E. Create inclusive decisions

Ask Kraemer/Womblé how they have done this in their past and if elected how they would achieve that better than Drieling/Vincik.

It is apparent that Kraemer/Womblé want to:

- A. Be in touch with the students
- B. Start representation grassroots at the SG level
- C. Get all organizations involved to prevent division
- D. Lead others by example
- E. Empower all students through opportunities

Ask Drieling/Vincik how they have done this in their past, and if elected, how they would achieve that better than Kraemer/Womblé.

Students want representatives and those that will relate to them and meet their needs. If a candidate is talking to talk, you should know it. I want to you keep in mind that the positions that a person holds does not dictate how much of a leader they are, it's what the person does with the concept. I have been in 10 things and gave 10 percent, but if I do one thing, I can give 100 percent because I'm not spread too thin. The general (president/vice president) doesn't win the war, the private (senator) does. I wish you the best of luck and also challenge you to make the right choice.

I hope that I gave some quality advice on how to select the best President/Regent and Vice Presidential candidates. As I said, this can also apply to the U.S. elections as well if you really want to take it a step further to improve our future on a national scale. Student Government wants to set an example as the official voice on campus, it starts at the top.

Sincerely,
Tom Centarri

From VOTE: Page 14

president Gerald Ford, a Republican, were asked to make recommendations for changes after the 2000 Florida debacle.

But, according to Carter, who officially observes elections worldwide, those reforms have not been implemented.

Carter is accusing Florida's top election official, Secretary of State Glenda Hood, of bias saying, "It is unconscionable to perpetuate fraudulent or biased electoral practices in any nation."

"A fumbling attempt has been made recently to disqualify 22,000 African Americans (likely Democrats), but only 61 Hispanics (likely Republicans), as alleged felons," Carter asserted.

The Washington Post reported that

Mr. Carter said Florida Governor Jeb Bush - brother of George W. - had "taken no steps to correct these departures from principles of fair and equal treatment or to prevent them in the future."

Although our votes don't seem to count much at all, just this once it would be nice to see massive progressive votes cast in numbers not experienced in recent history, and then organize for real change after this election regardless of who takes over the White House.

The Nebraska deadline for registering to vote is Oct. 15 (this coming Friday). It's not what it should be, but just for fun, just this once, let's do it and see what happens. For this election, we even get to consider the Socialist Workers Party who will be on the ballot in Nebraska for the first time against difficult odds. They are running a Hispanic man and a black woman as president and vice president, respectively. Their campaign slogan is: It's not who you are against, but what you are for. How refreshing. I appreciate the opportunity to vote with some integrity. (Just for the record, this is a Republican state and every electoral vote since 1964 has gone Republican. So we can truly vote our consciences, knowing that if we are not Republican, our vote probably won't affect the presidential election one way or another, anyway. We in Nebraska could just as well vote for The Cat in the Hat.)

But outside of the less-than-democratic system for electing president, there are local elections where your vote could really make a difference. I'll discuss these in the near future, but don't miss the Friday deadline!

You can get hold of voter registration cards and information by visiting any of the political or advocacy groups on campus, like the Women's Resource Center. Just inquire at the UNO Milo Bail Student Center's information desk.

If you register to vote, I can't offer clean underwear or ramen noodles like Michael Moore is doing with his "Slacker Uprising Tour," but I can promise a new collective consciousness that will scare the right-wing into needing new underwear themselves.
